During the twenty-two years of James's reign some two hundred and thirteen men were received on more than two hundred and fifty diplomatic missions from thirty-one countries. Of these embassies only France, Spain, Venice and the United Provinces maintained permanent embassies in London.

Table 1: Numbers of representatives sent from each country

The permanence of these few reflected the importance of foreign affairs and commercial interests between those nations and England. The seventeenth century diplomat was the personal representative of his prince to a foreign head of state, and, although such expressions as 'Envoy from The Hague' or 'Ambassador from France' were commonly used, these men were legally designated 'Envoy from the States General to James I' or the 'Ambassador from the Most Christian King to James I' and all diplomatic papers described foreign representatives in this way. This shows that diplomats were, in theory at least, chosen, accredited, instructed and recalled by their Kings and princes.

Table 2: Style and numbers of ambassadors

Of the two hundred and fifty-eight missions noted in Table 2 some 17% of the representatives were ambassadors in ordinary who came as official envoys to maintain the status and authority of their masters and to represent the concerns and interests of their countrymen resident in England.³ Alongside these ordinary ambassadors worked a select élite of extra-ordinary ambassadors, some 42% of the whole, who were sent to deal with specific treaties, alliances and depositions.

Unlike ordinary ambassadors who were, in general, career diplomats, the Extra-

In several cases these extra-ordinary ambassadors were James's own subjects who were resident, for various reasons, at foreign courts. Francis Nethersole, for example, who had accompanied Princess Elizabeth to the Palatine after her wedding, apparently combined his service as secretary to the Queen of Bohemia with acting as an intermittent agent to England for the Protestant Princes of the Union. He had several extended returns to England during this period. ⁴ Alongside Nethersole we also find Sir Abraham Williams acting as agent for the Queen of Bohemia in November, 1619. Sir Andrew Sinclair, a Scot, acted as extra-ordinary ambassador from Denmark on several occasions and Sir Robert Sherley, represented Persia at James's court on two separate occasions. ⁵ After his mission from James to Gustavus, Sir James Spence (Spens) was then ordered back to England to represent the Swedish King. The King's physician, Dr Theodore Mayerne, a Swiss subject, was

Sir Robert Sherley accompanied his brother Sir Anthony to Persia in 1598, and remained in that country for several years after his brothers departure. In 1609 Sir Robert was employed by the Persian monarch as ambassador to several princes of Christendom, for the purpose of uniting them in a confederacy against the Turks. Sir Robert came to England with his Persian wife, Teresia, daughter of Ishmael Khan, a Cicassian Christian, of noble birth, whom he married in 1607. His son, Henry, was born in England on 4th November, 1611. The Prince of Wales stood godfather to the child. See Nichols, Progresses, vol. ii, pp. 431 - 2; E. P. Table 4: Number of Missions served

This age range is well within the limits suggested by Wicquefort, who, in contrast to others writing on the subject, believed ambassadors should be chosen from the ranks of those aged between forty and sixty, on the grounds that experience came with maturity. Not surprisingly, the two men at the extremes of the age range, George Lewis, Count Schwarzenberg and Otto, Prince of Hesse, did not come to England as major diplomatic players. Count Schwarzenberg was sent on missions of ceremony while Otto came on an unsuccessful mission to propose a marriage between himself and Princess Elizabeth.

Table 5: Age at start of Mission

By the beginning of James's reign, instead of the grand entry of an occasional envoy, which excited attention and advertised, by the very fact of his presence, that his was a mission in which great issues were at stake, the development of Machiavelli's permanent diplomatic resident was seen. He became a exercised at their reception when the guests might expect to be greeted at the Court Gate first, then by a second group of courtiers in the first courtyard and finally by a third group at the Guard Chamber door, before being ushered through to the royal presence. This rather elaborate treatment was generally reserved for the most senior ambassadors, while those of lesser status had to make do with as little as one reception at the court gate. Nevertheless, whatever their standing, having been escorted through the Guard Chamber, ambassadors were then passed on through to the Presence Chamber and the King.

WHITEHALL PALACE

Hans Jacob Wurmsser von Vendenheym, secretary to Lewis Frederick, Prince of Würtemburg, gives us an insight into the protocols surrounding the first days of an ambassador's visit. He notes that, having arrived at Gravesend the entourage were met, on Saturday 14th April by Lord Willoughby and twenty gentlemen, 'well equipped, to receive His Excellency in his [James's] name', who conducted them to by the King were those from the United Provinces: Albert Joachim, the Deputy from Zeeland to the States General was knighted by James on 17th May, 1610; Jean de Goch, Consul of Zutphen, Eruwout van der Dussen, Consul of Delft and Joachim Liens, Syndic of Tholen on 14th July, 1619; Albert Bruyning, Johan Camerlin, Frederick van Vervou, James Schotte, Albert Soncq and Jonkheer Jacobus Wyngaerdes on 8th April, 1621; Henrik van Tuyll on 1st February, 1623 and the secretary to that particular commission, Capt. Constantijn Huygens on 20th April, 1622. 147 Strangely, James knighted no Spaniards, not even Gondomar.

One must surmise that James felt this to be unnecessary on the grounds that the majority of Spain's ambassadors were already noblemen, most by birth.

Patent of Knighthood, Constantijn Huygens, Westminster, October, 1622 BL. Additional Charter 12777

Despite the financial constraints men were still found to serve faithfully in embassies around the world. As Mattingly notes there was a great attraction in the office of ambassador:

The Ambassador's lonely task of upholding his master's honour at a foreign court, aided by no more than his own wit, courage and eloquence, was calculated to excite the imagination of the baroque world, its taste for magnificence, its interest in extraordinary individuals, its appreciation for complicated intrigue.¹⁴⁸

This elaborately decorated document is typical of Jacobean Patents of Knighthood. It is designed to impart all that is glorious and good about James's reign. The patent takes the form of Royal Letters Patent and the preamble justifies James's practice of rewarding meritorious individuals. It is signed by the king and has the Great Seal appended. It bears Huygen's family arms beneath the English royal arms.

the Catholic crusade, he was appointed ambassador to the King of England in 1613. ² Surviving portraits of Gondomar reveal him as a man of medium height with a dark moustache and beard, and close cropped hair above a wide forehead, with deep-set, dark eyes, a large nose and a firm, sardonic mouth. One must, of course, make allowances for the natural prejudices of English painters who have endowed him with these rather Mephistopholean features. Most portraits show him as dignified, formidable, almost saturnine. Only one portrait, that produced in Godfrey Goodman's Court of King James I, (fig. 1) makes him look good-humoured. Compare this to the sterner man portrayed by Grabado de Simone Passeo, in fig 2.

A. L. de Haro, El Nobiliario Geneologico de los Reyes y Titulos de España (Madrid, 1622) is the earliest biography of Sarmiento. F. H. Lyon, Diego de Sarmiento de Acuña: Conde de Gondomar (Oxford, 1910) is little more than a retelling of the traditional assumptions about the ambassador. W.R. de Villa-Urrutia, Marqués de Villa-Urrutia. La Embajada del Conde De Gondomar A Inglaterra en 1613 (Madrid, 1913) is, again, a retelling of the traditions and is based on the work of Lyon. F. J. Sanchez-Canton, Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuña, Conde de Gondomar, 1567 - 1626 (Madrid, 1935), pays little heed to Gondomar's English embassies, the only events in his life which make him of historical interest. C.H. Carter, 'Gondomar: Ambassador to James I', Historical Journal. vol. 7 (1964); C. Senning, 'The Carvajal Affair: Gondomar and James I', Catholic Historical Review. vol. 56 (1970) and the various articles by A.J. Loomie, S.J. are worth attention. The most modern biography of any distinction is J. G. Oro, Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuña; Conde de Gondomar y Embajador de España (Xunta de Galicia, 1997) Composite biography of Gondomar taken from Lyons, Gondomar, Goodman, Court, and Oro, Don Diego Sarmiento de Acuña; Conde de Gondomar y Embajador de España, the most recent research on Gondomar's involvement in English politics is B. and Boisschot, the Archduke Albert's ambassador, with whom he formed a close friendship. With the French ambassador he remained coldly cordial but he would have no dealings with the envoy of the States-General and he quarrelled with Foscarini, the Venetian ambassador - a quarrel that was to affect relations not only with that ambassador but with his two successors also. Foscarini is said have spread the rumour that Gondomar had 'poisoned a Spanish lady', and as this rumour was circulating at the time of the Carvajal affair one can only assume it to be one of the ladies in attendance on Doña Luisa (especially as one of those ladies was reported to have been ill and later died). 8 Relations remained strained between the two ambassadors, in part owing to the Venetian's anti-Spanish sympathies but also on the question of title.

It can reasonably be argued that Gondomar was one of Spain's most proficient ambassadors being highly skilled in the diplomatic arts. He came as ambassador to a power which, only a few years previously, had emerged victorious former students of this college who had suffered in England for their religion. She had read of the martyrdom of Edmund Campion and his companions and was particularly affected by the account of the life and death of Henry Walpole, who had been a staff member at the College. Her Jesuit confessor introduced her to the English fathers at the College, and took a small house nearby. ⁸⁰ Like many of her

She is said to have left this house to the English College and tradition has it that it forms part of the original buildings. Visitors to the College will find that, even after this time, Doña Luisa holds a very special place in the hearts of the staff and students. There is a full length picture of her outside the Vice Rector's office.

century as a 'capital mansion', it took ten years to build and consisted of two large wings connected by a hall. Here he had a large deer-park, which extended to Vauxhall and Kennington. Huygens noted in a letter to his parents that all manner of parties and festivities took place in the house and that, everywhere, he had met 'fort honeste compagnie' ¹⁷.

Caron House from Abram Booth's Journael. (1629)

Abram Booth, a member of a commission to London from the Dutch East India Company, listed the house in his journal as being among the finest private houses in London. ¹⁸ Situated as it was behind the village of Lambeth and directly across the river from the Court at Westminster it had, he tells us, 'in front...a vast field framed all round by very tall trees'. He continues:

Upon entering by the main gate, over which have been put the words Omne Solum Forti Patria, ¹⁹ one finds in the middle of a quadrangle, which is surrounded by decorative half-timbered structures, a beautiful fountain. And - apart from many fine Parlours, Halls and splendid Chambers, expensively

The full quotation, taken from Lipsuis, reads: 'Each land, unto a valiant man, his country is'.

A. G. H. Bachrach, Sir Constantine Huygens and Britain: 1596 - 1687, vol. 1, p. 125.

The house was on the original site of Messrs. Beaufoy's vinegar distillery. Caron House, with its gardens and orchards, was granted to Lord Chancellor Clarendon by Charles II in 1666, and in the following year was made over by the Lord Chancellor to Sir Jeremy Whichcott, in consideration of the sum of £2,000. It was to Caron House that the Fleet prisoners were removed after the Great Fire. The small part of the house which remained in the late eighteenth century became an academy. It was finally demolished in 1809. See D. Lysons, The Environs of London..., Counties of Surrey, Kennet, Essex and Herts, vol. 1 (2nd edition, 1810); D. Hughson, London; The History and Description of the British Metropolis and its Neighbourhood (1813).
